

Syria's interim President Ahmed al-Sharaa on Saturday appointed a 23-member cabinet, including four members from minority groups.

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad issued a decree forming a new government under Prime Minister Mohammad Ghazi al-Jalali, the Syrian state news agency (SANA) reported on Monday.

Following the fall of the Assad regime on 8 December 2024, Syria is currently undergoing a political transition, with Ahmed al-Sharaa leading a Syrian transitional government.

The full lineup of the newly established interim government for Syria, led by Ahmed Al-Sharaa, has been announced. This transitional government, formed after the fall of the Assad ...

Syrian President Ahmad Al Shara announced a transitional government on Saturday, appointing 23 ministers in a broadened cabinet. The move is seen as a key milestone in the ...

Syria's interim government, formed after the collapse of the Assad regime, has announced plans to transition to a free-market economy. Led by Prime Minister Mohammed al ...

The transitional 23-member cabinet -- without a prime minister -- was announced on Saturday, more than three months after Sharaa's Islamist group Hayat Tahrir al-Sham (HTS) led an ...

It was established in December 2024 by the Syrian opposition after the Syrian General Command appointed Mohammed al-Bashir as prime minister, replacing Mohammad Ghazi al-Jalali on 10 ...

The new cabinet includes several prominent figures from the Syrian opposition movement that began in 2011. Here's a breakdown of key ministers, their backgrounds, and notable ...

The new government, announced by the Syrian state news agency SANA, features appointments across key ministries, including foreign affairs, finance, and electricity.

Web: <https://inalaaccelerator.co.za>